are well versed in the fundamentals of investing in real estate. This is why they take interest in providing investors with a pre-assessment of the real estate market in their area. This is done by having a look at the market conditions, the underlying physical and financial characteristics of the property, and other relevant factors. The consultants also look at the history of the property in question. This will provide us with an idea of the market conditions at the time the property was first acquired. It will also help us to judge the value of the property from a historical perspective. Once the pre-assessment is complete, it is passed to an investment manager to evaluate the option in greater depth. Three Common Pre-Assessment Questions Pre-assessment will always start with a hard look at the data surrounding the subject property. As a representative of Maple Real Estate Investments, we attempt to answer the questions that most investors have in mind. 1. What is the history of the building? As much as 60% of a property's value is based on its history. However, many buyers don't realize this. The history of the building includes the use of the building, building age, the construction of the building, who owns the building and when it was built. 2.

How long have the tenants been there? Tenants in real estate are a major component of a property's value. They can be a great long-term investment. But, if a tenant has been around for a long time, then there is a good chance that they will remain for a long time, especially if they have a lease that is not up for renewal. If the tenants are new or have a limited life span, then you may need to evaluate your investment. 3. Can the rents be increased? Increasing rents can be a very effective way to increase a property's value. Plus, you can charge higher rents for newer properties, as tenants will want to rent in the most modern, up-to-date buildings. If your tenants have high rents, you may even be in the position of making money if you rent to the right tenants.

PEChat is a LAN Chat Application for Windows written in Assembly Language.This
application allows the users that are connected to enter to comunicate with each other.PECat is written in assembly language
for performance
reasons (it is written in assembler by using NASM assembler).

PEChat is a language similart to MS DOS Basic but with C-like language and error handling. Some of the features include: - Chat sessions - Multiple chat lines - Control screen flashing - Multiple chat rooms - Command-line data processing - Pictures stored on the server - Multiple Images as avatars - Network chats Features are added by hand in assembly language, adding new functionality can be done by anyone by adding a few lines of assembly code. E.G: In PECat version 1.1 Users can add their own user-defined functions. This includes user-defined variables and even functions. The SEARCH function can be defined as follows:

SEARCH(input_string)
SEARCH(input_string,
start_text_pos)
SEARCH(input_string,
start_text_pos,
end_text_pos) Check out PECat's resource file located in the
exe file for more
functions and variable
information. PECat
Functions: (argument)
What you type after it is separated by a space. An example function name would be

m_text_block What data type the data is (some variables are used to hold character data, while others are used to hold numbers). Character data can only hold a subset of data types. Only character data variables can be limited to only accept ASCII or ANSI characters. The default value assigned to the variable if no value is explicitly given in the function. In some cases the variable may be static so you may use the word = A space followed by '=' is used to indicate that an argument is required. For example PRINT "Enter the message:" WHILE m_text_block = "" DO PRINT "" END WHILE (argument) The argument type and

default value is either user-defined or a standard built-in function. To make a variable user-defined,
you need to use the word user_defined or
userdef
