The Elden Ring Crack (RP) After accessing the Notes on the Elden Tree, the four lords of the realms known as the Elden Ring ascended into the skies above the world, bringing the power of the Land of Ring to the Land of Elden. The people below, on the contrary, were reduced to a state of darkness. In the years that have followed, as the world became unwholesome, the Elden Ring eventually split into four groups. One of these four Elden lords took his followers and became the first emperor. The humans he subjugated were dragged underground, and their dark power was sealed in the Land of Dark. The second emperor was hunted down by the others and then cast out of the Elden Ring. He traveled the night until he arrived at the Port of Souls, and finally rose as an Elder, taking the name of "the Master of the Dark". As time passed, the unholy land of the humans rose and spread across the world. The Elden Ring was defeated, and the Earth was reduced to a state of purity. After a certain amount of time, the Elden Ring sealed into the Earth was released, and the power of mankind once again exploded into the world. The Elden Ring was born anew. The lands on the Lands Between, where the four lords of the Elden Ring were born, were forcibly opened. When the four Elden lords saw the lands they once ruled, the hearts of the first lord pained, and the other three looked on in amazement. The various thoughts and emotions of the Elden Ring came to life, and as a result, their connection to the world is again rooted in the realm of the Land of Ring. The Land of Ring is now open once again, and the first lord will head the Elden Ring once more.

Q: In one line python, how to combine a loop with value-result of a function? Sorry my bad english, need more practice. Say I have a loop inside a function and at the end of the loop I want to do something with the function result, `v=vector([1,3,4])` `def func(i,x): v[0]=v[0]+x return v` Wanting the end result to be `v[0]=5` I can do this in two line by saying `v=vector([1,3,4]) v=func(0,1)` or I can write the loop inside the function, `v=vector([1,3,4]) def func(i,x): for i in range(len(v)): v[i]=v[i]+x return v` I want to do this in one line like the snippet below, `v=vector([1,3,4]) v=func(0,1)` where 1 is the value and the result is v at the end of the loop. I'm not sure how to do this in one line. Edit: I can do this, `def func(i,x): v=vector([1,3,4]) v=v+x return v` but I thought there should be a builtin function that does this. A: In vanilla python3: `def func(i, x): v = vector([1, 3, 4]) v += x return v` should work. In your specific case it would work to use a tuple, like: `v = v + (1, 3, 4)` See: In python2, you'll have to convert the result of the vector. `__iadd__` to a list before doing the addition. `def func(i, x): v = vector([1, 3, 4]) v.__iadd__(x)`
