The community is located north of the city of Hanalei and from the village of Kilauea. The name is also applied to the Lower Waimea Canyon. Geography and land use The canyon was created by an erosional valley carved by the Waimea River. The river once flowed year-round at this site, but the canyons were dry. The largest outcrop of mountain ash (now naturally protected by a large rock wall), near the overlook, is the tallest cliff on the island, at above the valley floor. The lower part of the canyon is called the Waimea Canyon while the upper part is called the Lower Waimea Canyon. The area is a freshwater wetland. During the rainy season, the valley is filled with water that eventually flows through the canyons to the ocean. The valley floor slopes gradually upwards and ends with a long outcropping where Kauai's highest point, the top of Mount Wainiha is located. History Tons of the fossilized taro plant were found in the area in the mid-1880s. It was thought to be a mass of the plant deep in the valley, so the area was then called 'The Deep' and was then called 'The Deep Incline' in the 1890s. The first settlers arrived in 1892 and named the area Blue Mountain which is still its common name today. The first sign to arrive was a post that was erected on the side of the Mountain at an overlook. The first residents of the area called it "Blue Mountains" which evolved to the current name. Settlers began clearing the
