text to speech software Download text to speechQ: load list of ogg files I was using: import glob path = "C://Documents and Settings/matt/Desktop/01/sunset" list = glob.glob(path+"/*.ogg") for file in list: print file But it was showing the error: raise ValueError('Empty collection') ValueError: Empty collection How can I load the list of files from the location given in the path? A: You need to add the * to the path, it should be *. You can use the os.walk function to make it easier, because it will search directories recursively. For example, if I want to search /home/user/music/ for all *.mp3 files, I can do this: import os for dirpath, dirnames, filenames in os.walk('/home/user/music'): for filename in filenames: print(os.path.join(dirpath, filename)) Also, this will only find *.mp3, not *.ogg. os.path.join is being used to determine the path of the directory, and that is why you need to add the * to each argument. Q: What is the difference between pointer and reference in an interface? i'm new to c++ and i don't understand how exactly does the use of references are different from the use of pointers. Can anyone help me? A: In both languages (and maybe others), references are the same as pointers with the exception that they can't be nullptr (C++03) or null (C99 and C++11). Reference variables will have the type of the left side of the reference. A reference must always be initialized. i don't understand how exactly does the use of references are different from the use of pointers Think of it like a pointer which can point to a location within memory. References are like pointers that are also initialized. `int *array = new int[5]; int &a = *array; // a is a reference to the first element in array, initialized` `int *p = new int[5]; int *q = p; //`
