Sivani Desai in concert But Sivani Desai, a classically trained flautist from Mumbai who will perform a live broadcast of the first ever JNU Arts Festival on January 20, 2013, has become something of a laughing stock in "the land of Gandhi". Her flute, which she has been using to play sitar-like melodies from the 16th century for the past 25 years, has been vandalised by a group of students, including those from the hostel where she lives. "I have heard reports that my instrument has been damaged. It is disheartening to hear such a thing. I take great pride in my job and every year students

Download free AdobeQ: What is a standard player character class in Pathfinder? In a lot of older settings, there were a lot of specialist characters, but starting with 3.0, you can just play a fighter, fighter/assassin, whatever. Which class is the most standard one for new (non-old-school-level) players to choose? What are some of the benefits and disadvantages of most standard player characters being fighters, fighters/assassins, etc? A: Every new player character gets to choose a feat, which can be the feat they use to pick up their "class" feat (for Fighter, Fighter/Assassin or Barbarian). If your player character gets to pick this feat, the book is pretty clear about the benefits (and, on the books, the first class that's beneficial without taking this feat isn't "strength"), as well as about the drawbacks (the book is pretty clear to not use feats unless you have to). This is the feat linked to page 185 in the Player's Handbook: Pick a Feat You gain two other class feats; as a class bonus, you get the class feat you chose for your feat, plus one additional class feat. This is the description on page 186 of the Player's Handbook: The default feat to take is Pick a Feat. Although this feat is not considered a feat of base classes, it doesn't seem to be considered a class feat for new players, so they get to pick it. As far as the other classes in Pathfinder, they all seem to be viable choices for new players. There are some obvious benefits and drawbacks. Putin renews Russia's nuclear attack alert MOSCOW (AP) — A Kremlin-controlled radio station has broadcast a warning that Russia is prepared to respond with nuclear missiles to any attacks on its territory. The urgent appeal for action against "the insolent, hysterical and bold policy" of the U.S. and its allies was issued Sunday evening and aired this morning by Radio Sputnik. The warning followed the U.S. announcement that it will start supplying lethal defensive weapons to Ukraine on the Black Sea peninsula. It is the first such arms delivery to a European nation since the Cold War. Russia's Foreign Ministry said the U.S. announcement "only confirms the threat of a global threat to peace and security." Russia's warning to the U.S. comes a week after it accused Washington of aggression against Syria when a U.S. missile attack on a Syrian air base killed a dozen people. The Kremlin's communication strategy in recent months includes an emergency alert system that can be heard on Moscow's streets and on the airwaves of its state-controlled radio and TV stations. Russian President Vladimir Putin began using the alert system after a shopping mall bombing killed 37 people in Volgograd in December. The Moscow alert is also broadcast in far-off Transdniestria, an eastern Moldovan province that Russia annexed in 2014 and has at times invaded. There was no immediate response from Washington on the Moscow radio broadcast. U.S. officials have confirmed the arms delivery to Ukraine.¹
