Comparison of the immunogenicity of soluble and cell-associated variants of the replication deficient adenoviral vector Ad5. The replication-defective adenovirus Ad5 has been shown to be one of the most effective and safest vectors for gene transfer in the targeting of tumors or other tissues in vivo. The major disadvantage of this vector is the poor immunogenicity of the hexon capsid protein, which elicits only minimal immune responses. Over the years, strategies to increase Ad5 immune reactivity have been developed. Here, we compared the immunogenicity of the nonreplicating Ad5 vectors Ad5 Delta 32 or Ad5 Delta 24, in which the 30 kDa subunit of the hexon capsid protein was either highly or non-immunogenic, respectively. The hexon genes of these virus particles had been modified to contain either a stop codon (Ad5 Delta 32) or a 1 bp (Ad5 Delta 24) deletion in the DNA sequence. The immunogenicity was compared after subcutaneous (s.c.) immunization in C57BL/6 mice of both soluble and cell-associated proteins. The level of anti-hexon antibodies was determined by ELISA and the neutralizing antibody titer by serum neutralization. Using Western blots, the specificity of the sera for the hexon protein was also determined. Sera from Ad5 Delta 32-immunized mice were as efficient in binding hexon as in binding to the whole virus. In contrast, sera from Ad5 Delta 24-immunized mice bound to the whole virus and also to hexon. However, despite binding to the whole virus, sera from Ad5 Delta 24-immunized mice had no neutralizing activity. These data show that the Ad5 Delta 24-encoded capsid protein is capable of inducing antibodies to the hexon protein but is unable to elicit an immune response to the virus. A great WordPress.com site Menu Cat Deluxe – one of the most stylish spines on the market today. It’s also crafted from MDF, not wood – so it’s hardwearing and sustainable. Cat Deluxe is available in white, black, grey, cognac and copper, and comes in a mirrored wood finish. Cat Deluxe was introduced in 2013 and is produced in the US. The bookkeeper’s files are a nice touch, as well as the elastic closure sliders to keep all the documents in one place. The box is square and pretty and the cover is printed with a black background featuring the title of the book and the name “Cat Deluxe” in a fun metallic typeface. 5ec8ef588b
