A communication system includes a communication device and a central processing unit coupled to the communication device. The communication device includes a memory storing data indicative of the communication device. The memory includes at least one master table and one particular table. The central processing unit communicates with the communication device over a wired or wireless medium, and executes a filtering procedure on the data. The filtering procedure alters the data such that the data changes from the master table to the particular table. The data includes two indicators indicative of the data, where the indicators are each of a plurality of values. The central processing unit is configured to receive the two indicators, a first of the plurality of values being within a first value range and a second of the plurality of values being within a second value range. The first value range is different than the second value range. In an apparatus, a method includes receiving a signal comprising at least one indicator indicative of at least one property of a medium. A value of the at least one indicator indicative of at least one property of the medium is determined. The value of the at least one indicator is stored in a memory. In response to detecting that the at least one indicator is indicative of at least one property of the medium outside of a threshold, a predetermined condition or event is detected. The following calibration procedure applies to an orifice-type flow transfer standard and an orifice-type flow indicator in the sampler (the most common types). For samplers using a pressure recorder having a square-root scale, 3 other acceptable calibration procedures are provided in Reference 12. Other types of transfer standards may be used if the manufacturer or user provides an appropriately modified calibration procedure that has been approved by EPA under Section 2.8 of appendix C to part 58 of this chapter. 5ec8ef588b
