Changer Screenshots: The search giant has unveiled details about a mobile version of Google News, which the company plans to launch sometime before June 15, the one-year anniversary of Google's acquisition of the New York-based company. According to Android Police, the mobile version of Google News is already rolling out to users and will appear on their smartphones, similar to Google Play Newsstand for Android. Google News for Android also features the user's preferred sources and custom news sections, where the user can filter out news from certain sources and access the most relevant articles. The new Google News application can be downloaded from Google Play by searching for "google news," Android Police reports. While it's nice that the new application is now available for Android users, we can't help but ask: Why the delay? More than a year ago, Google acquired New York-based publisher Condé Nast. Since then, we have waited for Google to roll out a full version of Google News for Android. The company has already announced that the feature will
