The effect of pretreatment with valerian on the effects of cocaine and on cocaine reward was examined in rats. In a first experiment, the effect of valerian was tested in a conditioned place preference (CPP) procedure. A dose-response effect was found, showing the highest valerian doses (30 or 50 mg/kg) to attenuate the reinforcing properties of cocaine. Following the cessation of cocaine administration, a post-punishment test was performed in order to evaluate the retention of the conditioned effects. Valerian (50 mg/kg) administered 30 min after the conditioning session attenuated the acquisition of CPP in a dose-dependent manner. In a second experiment, the effect of valerian was evaluated in an intracranial self-stimulation (ICSS) procedure in which a drug-associated stimulus is presented to the brain. Valerian (10, 30, and 50 mg/kg) administered 15 min prior to cocaine significantly facilitated the development of a self-stimulation response in a dose-dependent manner, an effect that was still present 60 min after cocaine administration. Lastly, using a methadone maintenance treatment model, the effect of valerian was evaluated with methadone-maintained rats (0.3 mg/kg/infusion) exposed to a cocaine-maintained-conditioning paradigm. Valerian was administered 15 min before cocaine (1, 2 or 4 mg/kg) and the amount of cocaine administered during the conditioning session, and the development of the self-stimulation response, was evaluated. A significant valerian x cocaine interaction was found. This study clearly demonstrates the effectiveness of valerian in attenuating the reinforcing properties of cocaine. $i(i-1)(i+1)^2$ Let v be $1/4 + 22/(-8)$. Let $w = v + 4$.
