This meeting will provide an interdisciplinary forum for the exchange of information among scientists working at the forefronts of problems in developmental neurobiology. Much of this new information is a direct consequence of our present successful progress in molecular biology. Yet these advances must be interpreted in the light of a complex set of mutual interactions between cellular and molecular biology, molecular genetics, and developmental neurobiology. The Asilomar meeting will feature scientists from all parts of the world. The meeting will emphasize the roles of cell-cell interactions and cell migration in development, with particular emphasis on neuronal migration, synaptogenesis, and circuits in the mature nervous system. A combination of formal talks, discussion sessions, and informal tutorial talks on current
